Basically the policy statement formalizes archives procedure within the University regarding content of the Archives, location, functions and responsibilities of the University Archivist, and rules for the deposit of records. The policies of The University of Alberta Archives are similar to those already in force at the University of Toronto and McGill University.

CANADA COUNCIL TO VISIT ALBERTA

On the weekend of October 24 to 27, the Canada Council will visit Calgary and Edmonton. The purpose of the visit, as explained by LOUIS A. DESROCHERS of The University of Alberta Board of Governors, a member of the Council, is to permit members of the Canada Council to meet with research directors and other officials in the humanities, social sciences, and arts in the province of Alberta.

On Friday, October 24, the Council will arrive in Calgary. They will be entertained at a luncheon at The University of Calgary, tour the Glenbow Foundation, and meet with officials of arts organizations in Calgary. Following a civic reception, they will attend a performance of "Star Spangled Girl" at Theatre Calgary.

On October 25, the Council will arrive in Edmonton. Following a Canada Council reception at the Edmonton Art Gallery for people in the arts and the University community, held, coincidentally, on the last day of the current showing of the Canada Council collection, the group will attend a performance of "There's a Girl in My Soup" at the Citadel Theatre.

An Executive Committee meeting on the morning of October 26 will be followed by a luncheon with the four major arts organizations in the city. In the afternoon, the Council will attend a performance by the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, and, in the evening, a reception by the City and the Province.

On October 27, a Council meeting will precede lunch at the Faculty Club. The group will depart on the afternoon of October 27.

CANADA COUNCIL REPORT RELEASED

The Twelfth Annual Report of the Canada Council, released on October 10, lists all grants made by the Council in 1968-69, shows comparative figures from previous years, and gives the basic reasoning behind Council support of the arts, social sciences, and humanities.

The total Council outlay for 1968-69 was over $27 million, compared to over $20 million for 1967-68. The Council budget for the current year is $31 million. Much of the increase in funds has gone toward increased support of the social sciences and humanities, which rose from $12 million in 1967-68 to $17 million in 1968-69. Outlay for the arts rose from $7 million in 1967-68 to $9 million in 1968-69.

More than half of the $17 million spent on social sciences and humanities went into Doctoral Fellowships, to assist 2,183 doctoral candidates. There were 3,169 applications for the Fellowships, accounting for two-thirds of all Canadians working for their doctorates in the social sciences and humanities. The 2,183 successful candidates represent two-fifths of the doctoral population in these disciplines.

The Council reported that opportunities for graduate study in the social sciences and humanities have multiplied in the five years since it stepped up its academic program. The percentage of Canadians in these disciplines who had to go abroad for their doctorates has dropped from 40 per cent to 30 per cent in the past five years. The numbers studying in Canada more than tripled during the same period, moving up from 1,160 to 3,800.

Council support of research work in the social sciences and humanities amounted to $5 million during 1968-69. Most of this amount was used for Research Grants to 817 social scientists and humanists, and for Leave Fellowships to 170 scholars.

Grants worth $716,000 to support communications between scholars went for publications of learned manuscripts and periodicals, for national and international conferences, and to enable Canadian universities to bring in visiting scholars. Grants worth $1 million were also made to 34 universities for research library collections in the social sciences and humanities.

According to the Report, the biggest problem facing many Canadian arts organizations is finding ways of closing the gap between their expenditures and money available from private and public sources. The Council, while underlining the climb of Canadian arts groups to international respect over the past twelve years, suggests that arts groups continue to reach out for new sources of revenue, new and wider audiences, and more private donations.

The multiple screening process used by the Council to assess requests for aid is described in some detail in the Report. Decisions are made by a sixteen-member panel with rotating membership of leading artists, critics, and teachers from across Canada. Other experts are consulted regularly, both individually and in special juries.

In the field of music, Council grants of $2 million went to develop early career artists; to help bring musicians together with audiences through grants to orchestras, chamber groups, and opera companies; and to support composers through grants for the commissioning of new works. The National Concert Bureau was created with Council help to act as personal manager for outstanding young Canadian artists.

Grants of more than $2 million to professional companies from Vancouver to Halifax accounted for most Council support to theatre during the year. Through a substantial grant to the National Theatre School, the Council supported the training of young professional artists, provided training opportunities for apprentice technical staff under the Theatre Arts Development Program, assisted communication between Canadian theatre people through a grant to the Canadian Theatre Centre, and extended aid to individual artists.

While grants to the major ballet companies in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg, and to the Feux Follets accounted for most of the $1 million awarded in the field of dance during the year, the Council also made grants to the National Ballet School, to two modern dance companies, and to individual professional dancers and choreographers.

The larger part of the nearly $2 million the Council devoted to the visual arts went to assist 365 individual Canadian artists to continue their work, study, buy art supplies, or travel. Council-backed support services—an experimental foundry, a mixed media workshop, print workshops—were used by an estimated 500 artists, and large sectors of the public were reached by exhibitions mounted by the 20 art galleries across Canada.

Grants worth $544,000 in the field of writing went mostly in direct support to 132 writers and in grants to publishers to help bring out 60 books and 14 periodicals. The Council also assisted two Canadian universities to engage writers-in-residence, and backed poetry readings, literary meetings, and two organizations designed to represent the interests of Canadian publishers.
